“ I met chris thru a mutual friend. We all became friends actually becuse chris just rolled with anything. Hadn't heard from chris (or nip as we all called him) in years but for some reason I mentioned him the other day while talking to someone. It was about the automotive toy store and when he worked there. He used to tell me some horror stories about the pieces of crap hed have to work on. That was chris tho. If you didnt have the best of something then you either better get it or hed just annoy you with how crappy yours was lol. We all had good times back then after high school. The stupid things we did filing ourselves. How'd I'd think my car was so fast and hed say dude it's a grand marquis relax. He was a fantastic friend and even though we hadn't spoken in a long time, it hurts me to deeply to write this. RIP chris

DG

Nip was a funny dude man. Always making me laugh. Computer wiz that caught me a lot about them and always willing to help fix them or any other electronic stuff without hesitation. He even took time to make house calls and shopped around for the best prices on parts. I have a laptop still running from like 2005 because of him. True Android and PS fanboy. More importantly he knew my close friends and family and even though we kept in touch semi frequently as if lately we still have a bunch of memories together.
