“ Chris, I hope you found peace. I wish I showed it more when you were alive. It's been three years and I still can't cope. I knew you for a short time but I could have just been a better friend to you. You were such a funny vibrant person. To be honest when we talked you and I had such a similar upbringing. I grew up very similar to you and I knew although you were dealt a bad hand. I had the opportunity to be there for you and I wasn't. I feel like I have to finally say my peace so that it can finally stop taring away my soul. Even though I will never forget you. I know people say that only when you're dead do people care and I guess that's true because people don't want to take on the responsibility of helping. I cared when you were here but I did nothing and now it's too late. You even tried reaching out to me. That is my own fault and I will live with that. I should have gone to your wake but I couldn't bring myself to it. After all these years although I have so many people around me I still think you were the sweetest soul I've ever met. I waited a long time to say my peace in respect of you. But it's horrible because you deserved so much better and you didn't choose the life you were given. People sit here on your tribute wall going out of their way knowing you lost your life saying horrible comments like it's a joke. I hope if somehow you can see this you know it's because they are miserable. I guess I know you can't see this, but I wanted to say the peace that I've always wanted to say. They want to paint this picture of you but you were just a kid who tried to survive. You never hurt anyone. You will never feel happiness again or anything at all. Just like me, I know you probably never had a happy holiday to spend with people or people to care about you; on a level to protect you. To anyone that's reading this I wish I showed it and I wish more people showed it too when he was alive. But Chris was loved even if he doesn't know it. Because I loved him and I live with the guilt of being a better friend. I wish that the people he found important were there for him. He passed over something that should have never happened. It was so sudden and it's not fair. God gives us the choice to have free will and make our choices. I remember our job got a birthday cake for us and I never had that before and I assume it wasn't that common for you either, or even if it was you seemed so happy. I wish I could rewind time for you. Just like me, people in your life weren't there when he needed it. I hope I didn't contribute to your despair. I hope we are in a world where I can see you again someday when again. Hopefully one day I do the things that I want in my life. I guess in a way you can live through me. I will never forget you but I think its time for me to attempt to heal. I'll never in my life forget you. Such a short time and you left such a big impact on my life and soul Rest in Peace, my friend

I'm happy to see someone that cared about him, and that my post gave you some comfort.. I still visit here every once once in a while when he is on my mind. I guess we only really die when people stop thinking about us. Take care <3

Lilly, if you see this, I'd love to share stories with you about Christopher; he was like a second little brother to me, he called me sis; spent weekends and summers with us; holidays too. He had people who cared about him deeply and are just as rattled by his sudden passing. His foster family really cared for him too. I know it's coming up on 6 years but I was just thinking about him and came here and saw you commented 5 months ago. You protected yourself by not attending the services, it was really rough. But he had a large outpouring of loved ones show up. If you see this, email me please photosbycristine@gmail.com id love to share stories, since you knew a different side of Chris, and he can live on through our memories of him. Thank you for loving him, truly, you helped him without even trying.

“ I miss you chris. People are cruel and didn't understand the things you had to though. I think about you all the time and you deserved so much better than this
