

Daniel A. Rubino

April 14, 1929 - August 21, 2022

Daniel Rubino was born on April 14, 1929 in Brooklyn. Affectionately called Red for his bright red hair, my grandfather was a true leader and perennial family man. Red was a self-made man who taught himself how to read and excelled in everything he did. In his career, he started at the entry level of the sanitation department and worked his way up to being the leading superintendent of all Staten Island, no small feat. One of the things I admired most about him was his intelligence and innate desire for knowledge; a prime example being the way he discovered Ayn Rand. While collecting waste one day during his early years in sanitation, he came across some books being thrown out and one of them was The Fountainhead. He started reading it that day and it changed his life forever. He had the inquisitive nature to look and inquire, rather than just throwing them out, and he passed this nature on to his children and grandchildren. Red and his wife Betty raised two incredible human beings who achieved more in life than he could have ever dreamed, and this was his greatest source of pride and joy. My grandfather would always call me on my birthdays and make it clear how proud he was of me too. He was extremely proud of his entire family and we will always be proud of him.

Daniel will be laid to rest with Betty at the Cemetery of the Resurrection.
